Bronx District Attorney Darcel D. Clark today announced that a joint investigation with the New York City Police Department with the assistance of Homeland Security Investigations has resulted in the indictment of 21 people for trafficking heroin and cocaine throughout the Bronx, reaching into upstate New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

District Attorney Clark said, "Through the efforts of a year-long joint investigation, we have dismantled a major drug organization and charged the defendants with over 100 counts of various serious charges. Two of the defendants are charged with Operating as a Major Trafficker and could face life behind bars. The defendants allegedly peddled heroin and cocaine throughout the Bronx, spreading their operation to two other states. We will go wherever our investigation leads to make our borough safe and with our law enforcement partners, we will continue to pursue and prosecute those doing harm to our communities."

NYPD Commissioner James O'Neill said, "These narcotics traffickers operated an organized criminal network through which major quantities of illicit and potentially deadly drugs infected the streets of the Bronx during a period in which opioid-related deaths have been reaching epidemic levels. Through major cases like this one, the NYPD, along with our law enforcement and prosecution partners, continues to focus on the source and supply of illegal drugs and together we are committed to bring these criminals to justice."

District Attorney Clark said the defendants are variously charged with first, second and third-degree Criminal Sale of a Controlled Substance; first, second and third-degree Criminal Possession of a Controlled Substance; second and fourth-degree Conspiracy; and other related charges. Defendants Mario Martinez and Joan Velez are charged with Operating as a Major Trafficker. They face a maximum of 25 years to life in prison if convicted of that charge.
